The Feral Cat: The Story (by Howrse's highlight)

I ran. And ran. _____City ending in s_____ a big city. Like, size of the _____Adjective_____ planet big. Nothing like the _____Adjective_____ suburb I had grown up in. There, the scariest things were the _____Noun_____ door and the big _____Noun_____ with the _____Adjective_____ voice. Now, there's honky-metal-beasts and lots and lots of _____Adjective_____ men with loud voices. I'm starting to question this _____Noun_____ of mine. The _____noun_____ that I had someone out there, waiting for me to come and join them in rulership of a forest. I never realized it would take so long. I just wanted to see a forest, and catch something wild. And eat it. And rule it. Darting, I weave through the legs of the men.

"Don't mind me! Just a _____Adjective_____ cat in the midst of this chaos you all calll paradise!"; I yowl, though I know they can't understand me.

How can I stand being around them? I know how backstabbing they are, yet I decided to go through one of their biggest nests to get to a _____Noun_____. Huh, I am such an _____Noun_____. No, more than an _____noun_____.

Mom was wrong. There's nohing _____Adjective_____ about me. Just another _____Adjective_____ little plaything for baby Humans. Shaking my head, I get back to my task at hand: getting out of this thronging terror. I had to be close to the end. I am positive; I can feel it in my gut.

â??You! Over there! Yeah you! The grey one!â??

Looking over my shoulder, I see _____ Plural noun creeping out of the alley.

“What do you want?” I hiss, arching my back.

“Oh, nothing. Just your on our turf.” _____ Adjective Cat looks at me, all puffed up like. I try not to laugh.

“Fine, I’ll get off. Just give me a sec.” I turn to leave.

“Oh, no. Nobody gets off my turf that easy.” _____ adjective Cat and his gang start to close in. My _____ Noun fails.

I break out into a run. Faster, and faster, and faster, hoping I might make it off this madcat’s territory.

“Get her!” The faint yowl echoes in my ears. I _____ Verb and realize where I am. Bark. Green _____ Plural noun. Berries. Mice. Sun. Non-artifical stuff. I had made it! The forest! This has to be the forest!

Letting out a yowl of victory, I breake out into a gallop. Again. This is the best day of my life. No more loud Humans. No more stupid plaything. I am a _____ Adjective cat.

As the sun sets, I relax on a _____ Noun _____ looking out at the forest. My forest. Not a soul had taken it. So much for someone waiting for me to _____ Verb _____ over it with. Guess I'll have to rule by myself. My _____ Noun _____. I may have started as a _____ Adjective _____ housecat, but that was no longer. Huh, if only my brother could see me know. He'd be so jealous. I had caught a mouse, and one that wasn't in the basement of a duplex. I was a real cat now. A real cat, one that was _____ Adjective _____ and played by no person's rules. I have finally found it. My forest.

My forest. I like the sound of that.
