Afternoon Classes

"Hey! Wait for me," I shouted as I _____ Verb - Past Tense _____ down the hallway to catch up with my best friend, _____ First Name of a Person _____.

"You really should start carrying your stuff with you for the afternoon," he said.

I sighed. _____ First Name of a Person _____ was right. Ever since the switch from desk storage to locker storage, I had constantly been late to my afternoon class. It was always the same class too, Grammar.

I looked over at _____ First Name of a Person _____ as we _____ Adverb _____ walked through the crowded hallway. "Why do we even have to learn this stuff?"

He shrugged. _____ First Name of a Person _____ was one of those _____ Noun - Plural _____ that was pretty much _____ Adjective _____ with anything that came his way. It wasn't that he was good at everything. He just took the world on with a _____ Adjective _____ attitude. Just then an upperclassman ran over my _____ Noun _____.

"Ouch, that was my _____ Noun _____!" I yelled.

He didn't even turn around or shout back that he was sorry. I _____ Verb - Past Tense _____ under my breath. Just then, the bell rang, and the hall was deserted. I knew I was in trouble this time as I _____ Verb - Past Tense _____ the rest of the way down the hall into my grammar class.

They had already started reviewing yesterday's topic: Ending Punctuation.

"Great, another long and boring day," I thought.

As I was _____ Verb - Present (-ing) _____ to myself, the teacher handed out a puzzle activity for us to complete. It was about interjections and ending punctuation.

"What! I thought we were using the clickers today," one of my classmates _____ Verb - Past Tense.

"It could be worse," another students said.

"How's that?" I asked.

"I could have written this Mad Lib about you," the teacher replied.
