The Daring Attack

I _____(Verb - Past Tense)_____ my _____(Noun)_____ out of our hiding place on top of the cliff. Wilson was beside me, _____(Verb - Present Tense)_____ the bag of _____(Noun - Plural)_____. "Is that the enemy _____(Noun)_____?" he asked. I

_____(Verb - Past Tense)_____ at the huge concrete _____(Noun)_____, protected behind barbed wire fences with walls patrolled by _____(Adjective)_____ guards. "It certainly doesn't look _____(Adjective)_____", I said. We looked at each other grimly and _____(Verb - Past Tense)_____ . We left our hiding place and started to clib down the steep rock face behind the base. We _____(Verb - Past Tense)_____ for a moment on a wide shelf of rock, before leaping down to the ground. I pulled some wire cutters from my _____(Noun)_____ and set about _____(Verb - Present Tense)_____ a patch of fence big enough for us both to crawl through. One at a time, we _____(Verb - Past Tense)_____ between the _____(Noun - Plural)_____ against the walls, laying the _____(Adjective)_____ charges against the wall. The next part was the hardest. Together, we scaled the fence closest to us, _____(Verb - Present Tense)_____ slowly through the _____(Adjective)_____ wire on top. It took a long time to clear a big enough patch, but as soon as we were sure we had made a path for our platoon, we _____(Verb - Past Tense)_____ over the other side and ran. _____(Noun - Plural)_____ echoed behind us- the guards had seen us! But it didn't matter. Just as we dived into the trench we had dug earlier, the walls of the enemy base _____(Verb - Past Tense)_____ in a ball of _____(Noun)_____. As the _____(Noun)_____ cleared, our platoon poured out from their hiding places, through the paths we made and into the _____(Adjective)_____ building. The base _____(Verb - Past Tense)_____ to us!
