Treasure Island 41-53 NC

Rum and _____^{Noun} would be the most accurate objects Captain Billy strived for in life. While staying at the Admiral Benbow, he was often sitting in the corner booth, drinking his regrets away, all the while thinking of his past life as a high flying pirate. He was once a mate of the great Captain Flint, but he made many enemies _____^{Preposition} his many years of life. Back in the day, he was a servant of many captains, _____^{Conjunction} Flint was the most _____^{Adjective}. Billy resolved many situations very _____^{Adverb}, never caring of how the outcome might affect him. _____^{Pronoun} took chances, but still had many regrets. The regrets are much of the reason he craved rum so greatly. When Black Dog, his so called "friend" came to visit him, he suffered a stroke, screamed " _____^{Interjection}!", and was bed-ridden for the rest of his life, other than a few times when he would go down to the bar to _____^{Verb}. A week after the stroke, a man named Pew came and handed Billy a piece of paper saying he only had until 10 P.M. He died shortly after, leaving Jim and his mother alone with the dead man, the treasure chest, and a sea of buccaneers on their tails, searching for the key to the chest. The life full of rum and treasure finally caught up to Billy, and unfortunately left him deceased.
