The Preface

The Preface of the Author To His Sonne, Faustinus

And unto the _____^{Noun} of this _____^{Pronoun}

What and who he was attend a while, and you shall understand that it was even I, the writer of mine own

Metamorphosie and strange alteration of figure. _____^{Proper Noun}, Athens, Isthmia, _____^{Proper Noun}, and _____^{Proper Noun}, being fat and _____^{Adjective} soiles (as I pray you give credit to the bookes of more everlasting fame) be places where myne _____^{Adjective} progeny and _____^{Noun} did sometime flourish:

there I say, in Athens, when I was yong, I went first to _____^{Noun}. Soone after (as a stranger) I arrived at _____^{Proper Noun}, whereas by great industry, and without instruction of any schoolmaster, I attained to the full perfection of the Latine tongue. Behold, I first crave and beg your pardon, lest I should happen to displease or _____^{Verb - Base Form} any of you by the rude and _____^{Adjective} utterance of this strange and language. And verily this new alteration of speech doth correspond to the enterprised matter whereof I purpose to entreat, I will set forth unto you a pleasant _____^{Adjective} feast. Whereunto _____^{Adjective} Reader if thou wilt give

_____^{Adjective} eare, it will minister unto thee such delectable matter as thou shalt be contented

_____^{Adverb}.
