James's Rash

James woke up with a Noun rash. He decided he would go to the Noun to look for some concrete noun to make it stop collective noun . Sadly, all he found was concrete noun , not concrete noun . He decided that he would go to the Noun to buy some Noun instead.

When he got to the Noun , he asked the clerk if they had any. The man pointed him toward the Preposition of the Pronoun , where James found what he was looking for. When James went to pay for the Noun , he made a very sad discovery. The clerk told him that the Noun would cost $ Number , but James only had $ Number Noun - Plural to spend. He put the Noun back Conjunction headed home. When he got there, he decided that he would take a bath in compound noun , which he had heard helped to verb Verb - Present Tense . So James took a bath in the compound noun . It still didn't get rid of the Noun rash. He was so frustrated of the rash that he decided to try Noun to heal it. So he went to see Mr. singular noun . He possessive noun the healing shop in Proper Noun town Pennsylvania. He gave James a good long bath in Adverb itch chemical. That is what finally cured his Verb - Present Tense rash. He was very abstract noun that the rash was gone. It was also the end of a interjection yet Adjective day.
