Memily Mad Lib

There once was a           Noun           named Madison. Madison was a polyanderist. Madison had a friend named

Emily. was a polyanderist (or however you spell that), too. They both had at least           Number Noun - Plural          . All their husbands were           Adjective           and           Adjective          .

One Christmas, Madison was           Particle           on bacon. Suddenly, Emily came           Preposition or subordinating conjunction           and said 'Madison, the           Noun - Plural           got into the house!' Penguins are liars. Madison grabbed Noun           and Emily grabbed a whip and they tried to shoo them out. Then, the           Adjective - Superlative little penguins said           Adjective          , stop. I don't like you, you're all idiots.' This made Emily and Madison Adjective          . They then got out a           Noun           and whipped the smart penguin who went           Verb -          

          Present Tense           away, even though penguins can't fly.
