ALARM GOES OFF: I stumble into the kitchen and brew a cup of single-estate beverage

from african country

. I eat a bowl of my homemade mammal

- mild yogurt and an egg from the bird

I raise in my backyard.

The phone rings: my faimly member . "Can you meet us for dinner? There's a brand new farm-to- piece of furnature , nose-to- body part restaurant we want to check out. It's where all the vegetable

-avores are going and it only uses ingredients from within a number -mile radius.

I can't go because I've got to stay home to finish breaking down a whole large animal

(I sometimes turn the body part into cured meat

.) But I've also got a date. We're going to anew mocktail lounge hidden behind a big-box store

, where mixologists wearing items of clothing make drinks that harken back to the historical era

Before getting dressed, I check Twitter and see that the takedown of reality tv star

new restaurant is blowing up. My favorite quote: "The eastern european country tuna tacos tasted like they were seasoned with the tears of 1,000 zoo animal

's" Burn!

I hop on my bike and ride to the new artisanal-food market inside an abandoned packaged food factory. It's the only place in town to get gluten-free french pastries

. By the time I get home, I have just an hour to get ready for my night out. But first I have to feed my sourdough starter, which I inherited from my distant relative

, who brought it over from foreign country in the hull of a type of boat

I've got a surprise for my date: After drinks, we're going to try to get into tv chef

's new tasting menu-only spot. There are just number below ten seats, and each one is made from reclaimed medical device

After waiting number above two hours, we're in. It's crazy: I'm sitting next to musician

, and the seats are so close that supreme court justice is basically sitting on my date's lap. Even though the stereo is blasting classical composer at ear-splitting volume, the food is exquisite.

We

walk out, full and happy. My date invites me over, but I have to decline. I can't be away from my fermenting condiment for more than number above four hours.
