Once, I was handcuffed to this Proper Noun. They were super Adjective and obliging about it, but it was still a little awkward. We were given instructions to go to Edmund Chapel where we had to sing Noun of all things. So, we sang our hymns to Pierce Chapel and the surrounding Noun and to God our Savior, who Adverb didn't need ear plugs or want silencing headphones. Then we traveled through the Adjective snow and to the library, where we read children's Noun. It was kind of Adjective, feeling like four years old again, but who wouldn't want to be four years old after having to stare Noun in the face? Want to know what's interesting? Playing ninja handcuffed to someone else. Still hoping that no one broke their Noun. In Adams Park, we almost Verb - Past Tense via playing sardines. It was kind of hard to hide when it was impossible to blend into the surroundings and everything was Adjective and cold, but hey. What's Noun for after all? Mostly, though, I'm glad that I get to eat Noun handcuffed to this stranger. Because if two people can't Verb - Past Tense over singing, Verb - Present ends in ING, reading, and playing, at the very least two people can overcome the awkwardness by eating in unison the most delicious food known to all of Proper Noun.
