Bad Kiss

I met a cute girl at a party last weekend. She was fun, Adjective, and blonde. Perfect right? I'll call her.. ..

Name of girl in your class. The name you chose and I started hanging out after that party, and we hit it off quite well. I'm not the type to Verb - Base Form into relationships, so rather than making any moves on

The name you chose, I kept finding reasons to merely hang out with her.

One day, while we were hanging out at Name of a place (Which always smelled just like Noun - Plural) I felt the time was just right. We had been friends now for Number Time reference- min hrs days weeks years and I knew I liked her more than just a friend. After summoning my courage, I leaned in for the kiss. My heart was Verb - Present ends in ING. My hands were Verb - Present ends in ING. All I could think was, "This is really happening." It was... Well it didn't go as planned..... You see as I got closer to her, I realized something. Her breath. It reminded me of Noun - Plural. Also, I hadn't gotten very close to The name you chose before this, and I noticed a bit of an odor.. the smell was comparable to Noun. I've had days where maybe I needed a bit more deoderant, so I shrugged it off hoping it was just that day. Needless to say, I've had better kisses.

We kept hanging out, and the smell persisted. I didn't know what to do. I couldn't bring myself to tell

The name you chose that her breath made my eyes water and she smelled like Proper Noun - Plural. I decided to end it. Although she cried for Number Time reference- min hrs days weeks years, she understood that I only thought of her as a friend. The name you chose is still my friend. I see her from time to time. She is currently dating Name of boy in your class, who apparently doesn't mind the stench. It's rather unfortunate, but at least they are happy.

The end.
