The Cask of Amontillado

This is the story of Montresor. He was once a member of the _____^{Noun} before being trapped in the _____^{Noun} by a vengeful Fortunato. As the dark days slowly dwindle by, Fortunato, starving and lonely, vividly remembers the night he fell from grace; Montresor, donning a black _____^{Noun} and lighting a _____^{Noun}, had led him, Fortunato, down into the _____^{Noun}, where Montresor stowed him his most prized _____^{Noun} of Amontillado. A natural wine _____^{Noun}, it only made sense for Montresor to ask Fortunato to taste-test his wine. And why should Fortunato think Montresor was up to any funny business? Like Fortunato himself, Montresor owned a trowel, which made him a _____^{Noun}, too. But, alas - Montresor had deceived Fortunato; it was all a plan to get Fortunato into the cellar so Montresor could bury him alive. Such a _____^{Adjective} fate! Up until now, Fortunato always thought himself to be godlike, but now...now, as he stands tethered to a wall, he sees himself as nothing but a mere _____^{Noun}.
