Kiana's History Mad Lib

One Adjective day in July a Adjective man named Proper Noun peddled his Adjective bike down the Adjective streets of Minneapolis. He was very cautious of where he peddled because he wanted to avoid catching the Adjective flu epidemic from anybody because his Adjective friend Proper Noun has it and she says it's so Adjective and Adjective she would rather have a bad case of the chicken pox. While distracted in Pippins own Adjective thoughts he stumbled on his messed up bicycle. When he got safely to his Adjective home, Pippin felt so tired that he just wanted to lay down and rest on his Adjective bed. When he awoke from his Adjective dream he didn't feel so good. He must have caught that Adjective epidemic! Trying to think he realized that many people have died from this epidemic in Minnesota! Yet he had to try to get better. Coughing up Noun and blowing into used kleenexes was what he did. He stayed locked up in his Adjective apartment until he felt much better. After two weeks of feeling down in the dirt, Proper Noun got up and ran all up and down the Adjective streets until he got to the nearest newspaper stand. He hadn't been out in what felt like Number days! The newspaper said that dozens of people had passed away because of the flu epidemic. He was not one of them though.
