Tennis

I was watching the finals of the Roland Garros _____, but this year, it was moved to _____. I was watching Roger Federer; the Swiss, play Rafael Nadal, the Spanish favorite. Both of their _____ seemed amazing and almost _____, however one thing that set them apart was their handedness. Roger is a "Righty", and Nadal was a "Southpaw". In the _____ set, Federer hit a slice, and _____ charged to the net, only to be lobbed by his opponent. Federer ran back as fast as _____ could and hit a _____ shot, which impressed the crowd and made _____ loud. Federer had _____ the _____ two sets, but it seemed like he wouldn't give up without a fight. He had came back to _____ win the _____ set. He was _____ excited unlike his normal _____, _____ Federer. Nadal started a _____ fourth set with an 125 MpH serve that wasn't returned by Federer. He knew that he had to shift the _____ to his side to win. He _____ another fast serve, only to _____ this time. This was Federer's chance make another comeback. Federer stepped up and played aggressively and won the fourth set. Both players were extremely tired and felt like _____ could drop to the floor and just _____ asleep. They both walked _____ towards their sides
