Girl meets Boy

Meet our friend, First Name of a Person. A Adjective, Adjective, beautiful, once aspiring Noun and now inspiring Noun. But this story isn't about how Adjective a woman she is, but about a story of how Noun finds its way in peculiar places, strange times and among the most unexpected people.

Meet our friend's friend, First Name of a Person. A sleeve-less Noun wearing, free-spirited, heavy Noun skater. Or at least was, until he met our friend, First Name of a Person.

In the fall of Year, Joann was finally pursuing her future career in Noun as a Noun at Proper Noun Secondary School. Naturally, she was becoming a Noun and Noun teacher - and so she was preparing to Verb - Base Form herself to the dark-side of endless Verb - Present ends in ING, and selfless hours of Verb - Present ends in ING. Unbeknownst to her, in the near future, she would soon encounter the Noun of her dreams.

He was Adjective, not really Adjective, but definitely Adjective, in that Adjective haired, Adjective arms and vintage Noun kind of way. He was one of the dime a dozen Noun teachers - unknowingly entering a Noun system that he would soon realize was against his philosophy of Noun. He too was a Noun, but was about to finish his Noun when Joann was just starting.

It did not take long for Proper Noun arrow to Verb - Base Form.

After a week and half of Verb - Present ends in ING his defined Part of Body and Verb - Present ends in ING his Noun activities, Joann finally mustered up the Noun to ask for his Noun with the Adjective excuse of sharing Noun for Verb - Present ends in ING.

Despite her Adjective and successful act, Joann could not have anticipated Bryan's leaving for the Location only three months later.

Sporadic Noun - Plural were exchanged and finally a Noun was arranged, even though she knew very well that this Noun could not carry on once he moved to the Location.

The winter months passed on, and Bryan returned for Noun. Proper Noun - Plural arrow was still amidst the two, Verb - Present ends in ING them back to one another for another Noun. At this point, they realized that perhaps the Noun and the Noun was a force Verb - Present ends in ING them closer, rather than apart. Eventually, Bryan moved back Location but only for a week at a time would he be still in the city. Between the Noun and the Noun, their Noun continued at unpredictable times and were far and few between. Until one August weekend in 2009, when Bryan

Verb - Past Tense Joann to accompany him to his brother's Event on an Location where he spent most of his time growing up and where his father lived. That Location was called Proper Noun.
