The Magician In Disguise

Once upon a time, there was a man named George. He wanted to be a magician very badly. One day, he came across a           Noun          . He rubbed it with his           Part of Body           to get a bunch of dust off of it. When he finished, there was a           sound           and a genie came out! He told George that he would be           Verb - Past                     Participle           three           Noun - Plural          , but with           Adjective           conditions. The genie wanted to have some fun, since he had been stuck in the lamp for over           Number           years. He told George that for the           Repeat Last                     Noun - Plural           he wanted to be granted, each one would have a           Noun          . George would have to pick his wishes very carefully and be specific to get           Adverb           as he wished for. George was far too           Adjective           to be paying full attention, however. He was busy thinking about all of the money and           Noun - Plural           he would get with his special genie. So when it was time to wish, he first asked for a ton of cash. As soon as he said the word, the genie waved and made a plane appear. The plane flew in and dropped exactly 2000 pounds of bills on top of George's           Part of Body          ! He was smothered! For his next wish, he wanted to be out of money, so the genie           Verb - Past Tense           his           Part of Body           again and suddenly George was broke. For his last wish, George obviously hadn't learned his           Noun          , because he said he wanted to be turned magical. So this time, when the genie waved his hand, George suddenly was a           magical creature          ! Soon afterwards George was put in a zoo and watched by many tourists because he was magical, as he had asked for. THE END.
