A < Adjective > dictionary is the essential reference < Noun > for home, school, or < Noun >. A dictionary not only defines < Noun - Plural >, but tells you how to spell words < Adverb > and how to pronounce them < Adverb >. Dictionaries are available in local < Noun > stores or, if necessary, you can order one with a/an < Noun > card over the Internet. For the average < Noun >, a medium-sized dictionary is best. For researchers, an unabridged < Noun >, which has more than 200,000 < Noun - Plural > will be needed. For those who can't remember the meaning of any < Noun - Plural >, a pocket-sized dictionary works < Adverb >. These dictionaries are small enough to fit in a woman's < Noun >, the pocket of a man's < Noun >, or a kid's back < Noun >. As Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, the famous < Noun > wrote, "I'd rather go without food in my < Noun > than go without a dictionary on my < Noun > shelf."
