Ashes

She was about to ask what was going on when aAdjective male voice said, "Hello, Proper Noun"
She turned and saw a sitting in a chair, off to one side. He was so still, she hadn't seen him at firs in thelight. She shrank back, recognizing his, knowing this was her captor. Bu he made no move toward her, threatening or otherwise. Merely sat there, Jennifer looked back at him was older than her, probably in his middle fifties or so. His Noun was dark Adjective or Adjective, impossible to tell for certain in the Adjective light; a receding hairline, a few streaks of gray showing. His eyes were brown, dark-shadowed with weariness. A Noun of no particular distinction, neither Adjective nor Adjective, anonymous and unmemorable. She had never seen him before, she was sure, although with a and Noun he would have looked a bit like Mr. Proper Noun her high school Noun teacher.
