The Mystery Part 2

 Determiner night dragged on cold and numb. Mr. Blanks could barely think. His heart was racing, and his eyes were clouding up with tears. He could not believe that his daughter was dead. He tried sleeping but he could not sleep. The outside kept calling to him again and again, but Mr. Blanks would not go. Mr. Blanks could not do anything because the last thing that mattered to him was gone. Mr. Blanks sat sobbing in his kitchen chair for almost the whole night until finally after many, many sleepless and depressing hours, the sun rose to start a new day. Mr. Blanks went outside to clear his head. Outside the birds were singing, the trees were swaying, and the air smelled of freshly cut grass. Mr. Blanks could hear the children's voices coming from the woods. The children would always go out into the woods if it was a pleasant morning. Mr. Blanks listened to the children's voices and started to cry a little bit. Then Mr. Blanks went and sat on his porch chair and decided that if his daughter's murderer was to be found he must personally start on the case right away. Mr. Blanks decided that he would stop by Brawn's house first. Brawn's house was only a few hours away. As Mr. Blanks was driving his car to southern California, he received another mysterious call. The caller told Mr. Blanks not to stop by Brawn's house first because Brawn was reported dead that morning in the same condition as Samantha was. Mr. Blanks almost hit the car in front of him when he heard this news. How did this stranger know he was going to Brawn's house and how could someone have killed Brawn with all his bodyguards surrounding him? Was the mysterious person the killer? If so, was the person going after him next?
