My Summer in Marketing -- A Madlib

It was a come true when I found out my application and landed me the temporary marketing position. After a lot of curiosity, I'd be able to see firsthand what REI's Marketing Department was all about.
The first couple of weeks were a a review crash-course in all things There was reporting to be done, project plans to, numbers stories to understand and help others to tell, proofs to, and, and, lots of!
In the newness, I found familiarity and comfort in knowing the of REI. I was happy to offer this Noun my customer insight earned from working in Sales & Customer Support, and I was even Adjective to have those insights Verb - Past Tense . One thing this team did very well was to bring me into the action. From the beginning I was encouraged to contribute and my were valued.
This summer, I also took the opportunity to meet a lot of My conversations helped me better understand the org chart, as well as determine areas of interest, and opportunities for collaboration within the Marketing Department. Although things are pretty around here, the level of Noun was very high as almost everyone I reached out to was able to make time to meet with me.

consideration of everything I've learned, and the amount of people that I've within a within a relatively short period of time, I'd say this summer was mission accomplished! Unfortunately just as I'm
