? can't argue with you there. Cops are in large part wimps with an insecurity problem that they attempt to solve by taking a job where they can bully other people. there was a           Noun           when cops           Verb - Past Tense           like your friend, like they were there for you not to get you, and you felt good when you see cops around. Now you hate to even see a cop because of their over policing of good citizens. They conduct over 100 raids a day, with military grade weapons, and large           Noun - Plural          , most of which are inflicted upon harmless, minor drug           Noun - Plural          , (some of which end up in the person getting killed because of misunderstandings) and they go away thinking they are tough and heroes. A hero would solve some murders and return some stolen cars, maybe catch some rapists; a coward attacks a single human being with an army of           Adverb           armed and protected trigger           Noun           bullies. Okay, so I'm not to fond of cops and their           Animal           millions of non-violent offenders of stupid laws in prison. I don't know enough about this case, but it sounds like - as with the           Proper Noun           case, this man was           Conjunction           like a dangerous thug and not like a cooperative, nice, citizen.
