David's Cosmic Moving Adventure

As the last bell of the school day rings, David arrives back in Mr. Marshall's classroom to meet his fellow _____<sup>Noun</sup> scientists.

Timidly, David stands in the doorway of the classroom and watches as a group of about eight other students gather around a lab table in the center of the room. All eight pairs of eyes are focused on Mr. Marshall who is inflating a balloon.

As David walks toward the group, he sees that Mr. _____<sup>Proper Noun</sup> has a plastic water bottle filled with some kind of fizzy, bubbly liquid and watches as the balloon grows larger and rounder.

"Does anyone know why the balloon inflated?" Mr. Marshall asks.

Bravely, David raises his hand and catches the _____<sup>Preposition or subordinating conjunction</sup> eye before giving his answer : "The carbon dioxide from the baking soda and vinegar is filling it up."
