Now the baker's wife did not like children. She did not like boys at all. So she came to the front of the bakery and
"The cake is, Jessie," the little boy said. He was about five years old.
"Yes, Benny," said the big girl. "But bread is better for you. Isn't it, Henry?"
"Oh, yes," said Henry. "We must have some, and cake is not good for Benny and Violet."
"I like bread best, anyway," said Violet. She was about ten years old, and she had pretty hair and below eyes.
"That is just like you, Violet," said Henry, smiling at her. "Let's into the bakery. Maybe they will let us stay here for the night."
