Do You Want Out of Jury Duty?

Everyone should serve jury duty -- like any _____ Adjective _____ American I believe this.

But when I got the summons, I -- like many Americans -- wasn't ready to take an extended leave from work, so I started looking for a way out of it.

_____ Noun _____ Insider has a slideshow on the subject that _____ Verb - Present ends in S _____ up in the _____ Adjective _____ spot on Google, with advice ranging from "find a _____ Adjective _____ connection to the case" to "tell them you're really _____ Adjective _____ at work."

Simple enough, but I learned of another trick from a _____ Job Title _____ friend. Mention the term " _____ Noun _____ nullification," he said, and the Repeat Last Job Title _____ won't want anything to do with you. This term refers to the ability of a juror to decline to _____ Verb - Base Form _____ based on a _____ Noun _____ he disagrees with -- no matter the evidence. This sounded like a _____ Adjective _____ idea.

So on Friday morning in the snow I went to the _____ name of city state county ect _____ County _____ Adjective _____ Court.

After _____ Number _____ hours of _____ Verb - Present ends in ING _____, I was called along with about _____ Number _____ others to a _____ Noun _____ on the ninth floor where, after a lunch break, the jury selection began.

As

the defense _____ Job Title began a long spiel about the importance of _____ Verb - Present ends in ING a _____ Adjective jury, however, I realized I had entirely the wrong idea about how the process worked.

If we had any sort of bias, he said, we should tell them now so we could be excused. If we were biased against a _____ Job Title who was a former _____ Noun addict, we should tell them so we could be excused. If we had a problem with _____ State _____ Noun - Plural law or workplace _____ Adjective law, then we should let them know so we could be excused. The lawyers only got _____ Number vetoes each, he said, so they would prefer we tell them upfront if we wouldn't be good _____ Job Title. Also if we weren't available on February _____ Number, then we should _____ Verb - Base Form ourselves.

It was unbelievably easy to be excused.

And so it began. _____ Number by _____ Number _____ Animal (plural) were given the option to _____ Verb - Base Form outside and give an excuse, and _____ Number out of _____ Number did so, and all of them were allowed to leave. Meanwhile some _____ Animal (plural) -- given every option in the world to get out
-- said they were _____ Adjective and stayed in the Repeat Last Noun _____ for further questioning.

When my turn came I didn't know where to start. Standing in the Repeat Last Noun _____ with excuses _____ Verb - _____ Present ends in ING through my _____ Part of Body, I muttered something about the flaws of _____ State workers'

_____ Adjective _____ law -- only to be told that this was a _____ Adjective _____ case -- and then muttered something about workplace _____ Adjective _____ law, and finally played my trump card and mentioned _____ Job Title _____ nullification. The _____ Job Title _____ smirked. They weren't convinced of anything except that I had a _____ Adjective _____ attitude, but that was enough, and they let me _____ Verb - Base Form _____.

In the end I realized it's pretty simple to get out of jury duty (at least in my case -- and please let me know if _____ Full Name of a Person _____ has a different experience).

Just say that you're _____ Adjective _____.

This isn't even a lie. Everyone is Repeat Last Adjective _____. What the court is looking for are _____ Animal (plural) _____ who (1) have no _____ Adjective _____ biases and (2) are willing to _____ Verb - Base Form _____ minor _____ Noun - Plural _____ in the name of justice.

So if you say you're _____ Adjective _____, whether you really have a strong _____ Noun _____ or are just trying to shirk your _____ Adjective _____ duty, the _____ Job Title _____ won't want you on the case.
