The Little Blue Bird and the Gorilla.

One day a color bird woke up and said "Today I want to fly to the Noun." He spread his Noun - Plural and took to the Noun. He flew all the way across the city and landed at the Noun. There he saw a Adjective, furry gorilla. "Hello, Mr. Gorilla," said the little bird. "How are you?"

"Hungry," said the gorilla. "Can you bring me something to Verb?"

"Yes," said the Noun bird, and off he went.

The first thing he found was a cart full of oranges. They were too Adjective to fit in his beak so he carried them on his back.

He brought them to the gorilla who peeled it and swallowed it in number bite.

"Yummy," the gorilla said. "But I need more to number."

"Okay," said the Adjective bird, and off he went.

The second thing the bird found was a stand selling Noun ice cream. It was too Adjective to carry on his back, so he carried it in his wings. He brought it to the gorilla who swallowed it in number bites.

"Adjective," the gorilla said. "But I need more to eat."

"Are you sure?" asked the bird and the Adjective gorilla nodded. "Okay," said the bird, and off he went.

The third thing he found was a Adjective bunch of Noun - Plural. They were too heavy to carry in his wings, so he picked them up with his Noun - Plural. He flew them all the way back to the gorilla.

"Here you are," said the Adjective bird.

"Thank you," said the gorilla. He swallowed the bunch of bananas in number bites. "I'm full," he said.

But the Adjective color bird was so tired he was already Adverb.
