Money smells a lot like _____ Noun these days.

First, there was Indiana's _____ Noun scratch lottery ticket. Now, North Carolina lotto players can catch a whiff of the state's _____ Adjective _____ Noun --and earn the chance to win up to $25,000.

On Tuesday, the N.C. Education Lottery rolled out _____ Adjective Bucks scratch-off game tickets at barbecue restaurants in Raleigh and Charlotte that smell like _____ Adjective _____ Noun.

Lottery officials say in addition to the scratch-and-sniff tixs, there will be _____ Noun - Plural, _____ Noun - Plural _____ and prizes.

The lottery will be sharing details about a "1,000 lbs. of _____ Noun Giveaway" second-chance-drawing and encouraging North Carolinians to join a conversation on social media about which of the state's _____ Adjective styles is best.

"I can tell you that there was intention to make sure the ticket's scent didn't try to live up to the real thing, which the lottery is content to leave to _____ Adjective experts, like the folks at Cooper's [the first _____ Noun spot to offer the specially scented tickets]," lottery spokesman Chris Bushnell told The Charlotte Observer. "That's why we went with a _____ Adjective _____ scent."

Last year, North Carolina state sold nearly $2 billion in _____ Adjective _____ Noun - Plural _____, raising more than $500 million for a variety of education programs throughout the state.
