Explanation

I used the techniques of _____ Verb - Present ends in ING and _____ Verb - Present ends in ING because I saw in Helena's _____ Noun a proliferation of _____ Noun - Plural that worked most _____ Adverb to create a _____ Noun and carried some strong _____ Noun - Plural. First, I got rid of all the uses of " _____ Adjective- _____ Phrase-Transitive Verb " in order to expose other ways that the text _____ Verb - Past Tense with itself. Also, removing " _____ Adjective " left a lot of "I" statements that were more _____ Adjective, since usually " _____ Adjective-Phrase-Transitive Verb " proceeds a _____ Adjective - Ends in ER _____ Noun of how the "I" is _____ Verb - Present Tense or feeling. After that, it was a matter of _____ Verb - Present Tense a _____ Noun _____ Preposition or subordinating conjunction the leftover text that _____ Verb - Past Tense the preoccupations of the original _____ Noun. I wanted to _____ Verb a stuttering, fragmentary, grasping _____ Noun that would _____ Verb the rushed _____ Noun of the original, but without the _____ word that ends in -ness. It was _____ Adjective to imagine multiple _____ Noun - Plural by _____ Verb - Present ends in ING both across a line and vertically into other lines, and I had to _____ Verb a wide field of _____ Noun and _____ Noun by not " searching" for the _____ Noun - Plural I _____ Verb - Past Tense to _____ Verb _____ Adjective. I also wanted to add reflexivity to the _____ Noun to comment on the project of _____ Verb - Present ends in ING an " _____ Noun " and the processes of both the original _____ Noun experiment and my alteration of it. I think this helped to heighten the stakes of the poem and to complicate the idea of what " _____ Adjective - Ends in ER " actually _____ Verb - 3rd Person Singular Present in different _____ Noun - Plural and how it can be a compulsion or even _____ Verb its opposite and to what extent it can retain its genuine meaning.
