Dear, UCSD Print Media Publication

We are joyous adjective to inform you that your publication has been violent verb -ed. Although we value your constitutional right, we feel that we are making the adult-sounding adjective decision.

We by no means intend to mafia term for kill your publication, and this decision was made after a antonym to lengthy debate. In the name of transparency, we'd like to share with you the exact vote count.

The measure passed number that sounds pretty democratic to Chargers score last night.

We are doing percentage of what we can to help you find alternative sources of silly synonym for money. In the meantime, other funding sources include: local restaurant, preferably Dennys, UCSD

Bookstore, Name of rich alumnus like that GoPro.guy, or pulling money out of your arbitrary bodily orifice. Or, look into other publishing mediums, such as website generally used by twelve-year-olds.

To learn more, you can find our official vote and statement in UCSD publication that no longer has funding. If you have questions or concerns about this decision, please report them to made up email address by date that was at least three days ago. Your feedback is _____ to us; every student's opinions are _____ to us.
