Three Blank Pigs

Once upon a time there were three Adjective pigs. You know the story, the one where the two pigs are Adjective and build their Noun - Plural out of straw and Noun, and the Adjective Adjective wolf comes and with a huff and a Noun, he Verb - Present ends in S their houses down. Luckily for the two lazy Noun - Plural, their brother was Adjective, and he put time and Noun into Verb - Present ends in ING his house out of Noun - Plural. At least the two Adjective pigs were fast enough to Verb - Base Form to the brick house and get there before the Adjective Adjective wolf caught them. Then the wolf comes and tries to Verb - Base Form the third Noun down, but he can't because it's made of Noun - Plural. I'm not sure why the wolf isn't Adjective enough to realize this - maybe because wolves don't Verb - Base Form houses, and in real life, pigs don't either. Anyways, the Noun is really hungry, so he decides to Verb - Base Form up on top of the house and go down the Noun to Verb - Base Form the pigs. I guess he really isn't Adjective because he Verb - Present ends in S the pigs what he's doing, and they have time to Verb - Base Form a Noun and the Noun gets Adjective - literally.
