

sdfasdf

1. Proper Noun
2. Proper Noun
3. Adverb

sdfasdf

Heath ate a hamburger. My mother is named "Proper Noun." "Betty Jean" to be precise. She was named after her mother, my grandmother--another "Betty," although my grandmother's middle name was "Lou." My name is "Proper Noun," actually "William Heath Alan," so I'm not a "Betty," at least not legally-speaking.

But as the years go by, I find that my partner (a "Gary," also not a "Betty") refers to me with Adverb greater frequency as "Betty Jean" because, so the stereotype goes, the more we age, the more like our mothers we eventually become. Like my mother, I sometimes speak a little too loudly. I'm also prone to repeating myself in conversations. And, on short or long road trips, I have a nervous habit of scanning radio stations for pretty much the entire ride, something my mother religiously did back in the days when push-button radios were standard and disco was still vogue.