When I first came to New York

When I arrived to New York, I found myself in a situation where I had to financially support myself. I had to quickly find a job and and Adjective place to live. Though, a job and housing are both important, I realized that finding a job was the priority. However, time was Verb - Present Tense by quickly and I had to move fast. I was Verb - Present Tense Preposition or subordinating conjunction Preposition or subordinating conjunction conjunction Noun and I had a lot of bills to pay. Fortunately, I had a friend who me helped to get a job , so I finally started working in a restaurant as a busboy. Working in New York provided me the income I needed for myself, but at the same time made me Adjective. I was making the money that I could have never made in Colombia, and I was spending more than I planned. I wanted more, so I spoke to my manager to ask him for more hours, thus I could spoil myself.
