A bitter wind blew through the alleys of Faile's low, squat buildings. The dark gray clouds churning overhead had begun spitting icy drops. The usually crowded streets were empty. The threatening storm had scared _____ Adverb - Superlative everyone indoors. Vendors, _____ Adverb hawking their various wares, were already packing up though it was only past midday. The city's countless homeless children were scurrying to whatever protection they could find, typically in the shallow basements of derelict buildings. Although the streets would be empty and perfect for scavenging, to get sick in Faile was a death sentence. Even the stray cats and dogs had vanished, seeking shelter _____ Preposition or subordinating conjunction the freezing rain.

On any other day, _____ Modal would have been right alongside them, hiding in his little underground den from coming _____, but today he was too busy running from the two men chasing him. He charged headlong through the alleys, puddles splashing underfoot and the stolen oilskin pouch _____ Verb - Past Tense tightly in one hand. The dark storefronts _____ Coordinating conjunction boarded buildings flashed by. He kept looking for somewhere to hide, but only garbage and small crates lined the muddy, empty cobblestone roads.
