Measured Moments

My mother grew up in a very wealthy in Massachusetts, for her father was an at MIT as an engineer. He died very young and there was a series of unfortunate events that took place in her that left them a little more economically disadvantaged. They were able keep their house in the community, but they were barley holding on to their home. As my grew older, she developed a mental illness, something her family had been unable to deal with. When my mother had me, she had been working, but the Noun - Plural from pregnancy contributed to her mental illness worsening.
She was no longer able to work and welfare ended up being a safety net for her and I. I was on welfare for the first ten years of my (1982 through the early nineties), for I was a dependent child upon my mother's care. We in programs such as Wick and food stamps, and I even verb - to head start. We also had housing through Section 8. I remember when I was very young, my mother and I were on alist for more appropriate housing for almost two years. The two of us had been living in a one-room studio Noun that had Noun - Plural and rats. My mother had gone back to school, trying to get her Bachelor's Degree, but her illness had again prevented her from her education. We hung on by the of our teeth frequently. I remember getting a thousand dollars from a family member to buy back to Noun clothing and Adjective necessities. Within a week or two of buying these desperately needed items, there was a fire in our building, and we lost everything. There was no recovering because of course we had no Noun for renter's insurance, and so we had to start all over again. We again had to be verb-on the list for	Adjective housing because	se now we were living in a mo	otel room, which v	was all that we could afford, while	e we waited for supported	Adjective housing. Mos	tly all of the child	ren and Noun - Plural	_ we interacted with in the a	partment buildings that we	Verb - Past Tense	in were also on public assistance.
