The African American I admire most is Barack Obama, and it's not because of what everyone else says "Oh he's the first black president" yes I do look up to him for that because that was success for the African American culture. I admire him because of where he started. Obama started like any other black child with an _____ Noun - Plural _____. And he took his and made it and success, Because of Barack younger black children had goals they wanted to follow in his footsteps. He put a good example out for young black children. Obama when he was elected he made a good change to the United States, He changed and made it a _____ Adjective - Ends in EST _____ for us children an easy thing, I do know a lot of Caucasians were disappointed that he was president but Obama did not let that stop him he still moved forward and kept a smile on his face through all the pain. Obama is a legend in my eyes if I had the chance to meet him I would tell him so much I feel like I wouldn't be shy but I would be able to sit comfortable and have a conversation with him. I think I would share my admiration with him; I would first and foremost thank him. Thank him for keeping us _____ Verb - Past Tense _____ and not giving up on us and his entire culture and this entire country. I think I would talk about how, how he did it? What made him do it? Why he did it? And was it tough? I would have to appreciate all that he has done; I also admire his wife because she is a strong black woman.
