when, so he just kind of waited there. Well, he went to the bathroom, and then he came back and waited there; I was finishing writing in my journal. Anyway, so we did talk. We walked all the way here from the chapel, just.. talking. And then, at that moment, after all that.. talking, then he asks me out."

They looked puzzled, but the girl didn't seem to notice them in her reverie. She had recounted the whole event not in a tone of exasperation but, it seemed like, pity. After a moment's pause, she reflected:

"That poor boy. All he wanted was a date, but what he got was all of that talking."

Her friends looked at each other.

"So... are you going on a date or not?"

"Oh," she said, as it dawned on her.

"Yeah."
