Through the Looking Glass

However, there was the full in sight, so there was nothing to be done but start again. This tim she came upon a large flower-bed, with a border of, and a growing in the middle.
"O Tiger-lily," said Alice, addressing herself to one that was in the wind, "I wish you could talk!"
"We can," said the Tiger-lily: "when there's anybody worth
Alice was so that she could not speak for a minute: it quite seemed to take her breath away. A length, as the Tiger-lily only went onabout, she spoke again, in a voicealmost in a whisper. "And can all the flowers talk?"
"As well as you can,"synonym for said the Tiger-lily. "And a great deal louder."
"It isn't manners for us to, you know," said the Rose, "and I really was wondering when you'd speak! Said I to myself, 'Her has got some sense in it, though it's not a one!' Still, you're the right colour, and that goes a long way."

"I don't care about the colour," the Tiger-lily remarked. "If only her curled up a little more, she'd be all right."
Alice didn't like being, so she began asking questions. "Aren't you sometimes at being planted out here, with nobody to take care of you?"
"There's thesame famous person in the middle," said the Rose: "what else is it good for?"
"But what could it do, if any came?" Alice asked.
"It sayshyphenated noise!" cried a Daisy: "that's why its part of Body are called made-up hyphenated thing !"
