Mad Monster Mad Lib

Victor Frankenstein is a           Noun          . He takes on his           Adjective Ends in EST           laboratory           Noun           ever--creating           Noun          . But when he           Adjective           brings the           Noun           to life, Victor is so           Verb Past Tense           by his creation that he gets           Adjective           and runs away. The           Adjective           monster looked for Victor in the           Noun Plural          . While living in the           Noun Plural          , Frankenstein's           Noun           learns to           Verb Base Form          ,           Verb Base Form          , and           Verb Base Form           until one           Noun           he and Victor           Verb Base Form           again. Frankenstein's           Noun           is           Adjective           to see his "father," but when           Proper Noun           calls him a           Noun          , the misunderstood creature realizes the real           Noun           is actually           Proper Noun          .
