Day in the life of Proposals

On a fine Tuesday morning, I opened up my email to find proposals assigned to me. I in shock and quickly started to read through them to make sure I note all the items needed for outreach. I pour my self some nice Adjective and start my work. As soon as I begin, comes in with an urgent request for help on a project. I lend a Part of Body Next I jump on a After that, I start to work, then the phone rings, its my kids saying they are I rush to to pick him up. I get him settled. Time to start my work but my stomach is verb Present ends in ING so I grab a to eat. I then start to work but realized I have emails waiting for replies, I respond quickly. Time is verb Present ends in ING by. I finally start doing outsourcings and sending emails. Then I Verb Base Form on another meeting. I pour another cup of I stare blankly at the and think " What was I just working on?". It comes to me, and I start typing away to get something close to being finished for the day but of course I receive an email asking for a completed RFP. I immediately start to and realized I had already completed it, just needed to send out. Now its the end of the day, time to log off and the office phone rings, I answer and its a salesperson. That's pretty much a day in proposals.
