To my great friend, First Name of a Person.

Happy Valentines Day! I know that this year we are both without a Noun and, although February 14 has been an important date for us in the past, this time I did not want it to be less. On this day we must not only celebrate the love of Adjective relationships, we must also remember the people we love so much ... And, for that, I have remembered you.

Friend, since I Verb Past Tense you in that place when we were so Adjective I have not wanted to separate from you. Back then we shared toys, moments of imagination, moments of laughter and a long etcetera that will always be saved in our Adjective childhood.

Now I can only express my best Noun for this day and for all the rest. It only remains for me to remind you that you will always have me with you and that our friendship will last forever. Because loves come and Verb Base Form, but friends like you Adverb remain.

Love you very much!
