George Washington's Accident

There once was a           Noun           named George           Last name          . As a child, he always got himself into a gigantic amount of trouble. But back when, was his first           Verb          . He remembered it as if it happened           Day of the week          . Here is the story of President George Washington's fist           Adjective           scolding. One day, George was playing with his           Noun          . He was           Verb           it to his friend,           First name          .           First name           missed it and it           Verb           through the brand new window! Glass was shattered all over the           Noun          . He did not have enough time to           Verb           it up. He heard the           Noun           outside,           Verb           his dad off. He ran inside to           Verb           but it was too late. "George! what happened?"; his father           Verb          . "I don't know."; George said           Adjective          . He knew he would have to           Verb          . "Alright, I threw my           Noun           and it went through the window, I'm sorry. I didn't mean to."; George confessed. "It's alright son"; his father           Verb           as he patted little George on his           Noun          . "As long as no one got hurt, that's all that matters."; Further more, George will always be a           Adjective           little boy.
