The Wendigo

"The Proper Noun" isn't only a story in the first installment of the series, but it's also based on actual Adjective American lore. In this version, a Noun wants to go hunting where people rarely go. No one wants to help him until he finds a man desperate for money, Person. They go off into the woods together, and on the third night there's a huge Noun. Something begins calling out to Person, who's crouched in a corner of the Noun. After it becomes too much, he runs out of the tent and into the woods, soon shouting, "Oh, my Adjective body part plural! My Adjective body part plural of fire!" The Noun, unable to figure out what happened to his companion, returns to the village where the people mention the Proper Noun. Apparently, it "verb ending in s modifying a noun with the Noun" and "verb ending in s modifying a noun you along so fast, your body part plural begin to burn away. exclamation."
