Cameras Don't Lie

A teenage girl had been babysitting for the same family for a few years. The children were generally well behaved, and she enjoyed looking after them.

One day the family called the Noun with a special request.

"My sister and her husband verb past tense modifying noun in an accident, and we have taken in their Noun," the father said. "She is very quiet after what happened to her parents, but she is no trouble.

Would you mind looking after her as well as the other Noun Plural this Saturday?"

The babysitter said she didn't mind at all, and on Saturday evening, she went to the family's Noun.

The children settled down in bed and they all quickly fell asleep, except the Noun. The little Noun came back downstairs and asked if she could sit with the babysitter because the Noun that verb past tense modifying noun her parents wouldn't let her go to sleep.

Thinking the little Noun was imagining things, but understanding she had just lost her Noun Plural, the babysitter decided to let the little Noun sit with her.

Seeing

the babysitter's Noun, the little girl asked if she could take some photos with it and the babysitter said exclamation. The little girl cheered up, just a little, and walked around the room taking photos of her Noun in different spots and snapping Adjective selfies.

Every now and then the little girl would run back to the babysitter, Verb Present ends in ING, and asking her to chase away the Noun. To make the little girl feel better, the babysitter would pretend to chase Noun away.

After a while the little girl could stay awake no longer and fell asleep on the Noun. The babysitter carried her up to bed, tucked her in, and Verb Past Tense back downstairs.

She picked up her phone with the intention of deleting the Noun Plural the little girl had taken. But when she began to look at them, she let out a onomatopoeia. In each of the selfies the little girl had taken, behind her, there was a pair of Adjective Noun Plural staring out of a noun possessive body part.
