DEAR ABBY 6

DEAR ABBY: I have been married for close to a Time period, and in this short time I've seen a side of my wife I've never seen before. Although I met her during a period of sobriety, she Verb Present ends in S now. The problem is what she does when she Verb Present ends in S. On one occasion, she was supposed to go to the location and return on foot. Instead I found her in a car with a Noun, Adjective and high. She claimed it was too cold to Verb Base Form and she was just trying to keep Adjective.

On another occasion, she got drunk and had a Adjective Noun with whom she'd been intimate in the past pick her and all her belongings up and left me watching her Verb Base Form away with him. She later called apologizing adjective ending in ly from a different man's Noun begging me to pick her up. I could go on and on with similar scenarios, but my letter would be too Adjective.

Her latest is when she told me she put a "Noun" on her phone so I couldn't find out where she had Verb Past Tense. (She had really just turned off Noun sharing on her phone.) She says she loves me with all her heart and there's no one else, but I find it very hard to believe. Am I the world's biggest, _____ Adjective Ends in EST _____ Noun for not divorcing _____ person? (I can't just turn off my love for _____ person.) -- _____ nickname OUT WEST

DEAR "_____ nickname": If you haven't already contacted your _____ job title, schedule an appointment and be tested for any _____ Noun Plural your wife may have passed along to you after one of her escapades.

This scenario will continue until she comes to the realization that if she doesn't immediately get help for her _____ Verb Present ends in ING, her marriage is _____ Adjective. The question is whether she's willing (or able) to give up her addictions to _____ Noun Plural, whatever other _____ Noun Plural she may be sampling, and _____ verb ending in ing modifying a noun with other men.

Loving her doesn't make you _____ Adjective or a _____ Noun. However, sooner or later you must accept that you can't fix what's wrong with her, and you'll have to decide how much more _____ Noun you can tolerate. Please accept my _____ Noun.
