Computer Trouble

I arose Tuesday morning at 10AM with a gasp. Late for my meeting, I myself out of bed with no other thought than to race to my laptop to turn on the My heart, I watched as the battery symbol flashed on the screen. I let out a cry like I had just werb Past Tense my toe and tore my room apart looking for the charger. It was nowhere to be found. In that moment, I thought of my drafting the letter informing me that my job had been terminated. My chest was heavy, my legs trembled. I threw pants on and ran out the door, grabbing my keys and barely locking the door. I made it to the train a few seconds before it left. Because it was so late in the day, the train was empty as all workers were already at their offices. I shook my leg the entire thirty minutes, cursing every time the train took unnecessary When the train stopped, I sprinted to the office like an Olympic runner. My mission was to someone from the IT team. I screamed for a charger and was handed one by a colleague. I grabbed it and found a seat. I plugged in the charger to the outlet and opened my to find my computer. It was not there.
