Suicidal Squirrels

I went out toyesterday afternoon and was getting out of myjust as the vet's zoomed past the When I arrived at the the vet, the farrier, the manager, and several other volunteers and boarders were doing their best to get Bella up. She went down about an hour before I got there, and the farrier andmanager were right there and at her side instantly. Bella suffered nerve damage in herfrom West Nile, and then, a year later, managed to survive EPM but not without lingering severe neurological problems. Two other rescues rejected her before she made it to us, and I guess we have a weakness for retired, damaged She had a lot of troublebut, through massages and physical verb ending in ing was sound enough to enjoy many years at the rescuewith the other mares in pasture and getting love from al herfriends. Often she would roll and need help moving her hind legs into position to stand up again, but she always got up on the first or second try!
Yesterday, however, was very different. It looked and felt as if her legs were petrified- we could not move them into position for her, and after a couple attempts she stopped putting muchinto it. By the time got there, she looked completelyand was barely lifting her head. The decision was made to put her down, and it was aone to be present for. Always a fighter, Bella was on her side, whinnying

to her friends, 'running' with her front legs, and looked each of us in the eye before she calmed down, took a few breathes, and was still as the last dose was administered. As the vet said, not many can survive West Nile AND EPM, then live a happily into their late teens with the severe neurological damage Bella willfully pushed through!
2009 has been a hard year for many, and thewas no exception. In addition to three of our 33+ year olds, our 29 year old and Bella all passing on, we saw four horses return to the rescue after their owners could no longer afford their two of whom came back sick but thankfully in good weight. This year, we have had so many horses in need that we perpetually had horses in iso pens, boarding spaces, and even turned out with boarders' horses.
On the plus side, we participated in a nation-wide effort to save 300 starving and our two boys are lookingand have started groundwork training with a professional who has volunteered his time! The downturn in the economy left us with some very nice who were adopted before they left iso, and many volunteers finally had the chance to adopt athat
